WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

High pressure aloft will maintain warm and dry weather across northwest California through the rest of today. An approaching trough will bring cooling temperatures next week.

Medford Weather:

The flow aloft is now zonal as a long wave ridge flattens over the area. The storm track will remain north of the area but the region will catch the southern end of a weak cold front which will move onshore later today. It will bring some light precipitation to the north coast and Umpqua Basin. The remainder of the area will remain dry. It will get breezy east of the Cascades this afternoon and evening. High temperatures will be near normal near the coast, a few degrees above normal in the Umpqua Basin, and 5 to 15 degrees above normal over the rest of the area. Flow aloft will become southwesterly Tuesday and gradually increase through Wednesday as an upper trough digs offshore. Heights will change little during this interval and the storm track will remain to the north of the area, so it will be dry. The inland cooling trend will continue with inland highs dropping 5 to 10 degrees from Monday to Wednesday over Oregon and 10 to 15 degrees over northern California.

Reno Weather:

Dry conditions along with above average temperatures will continue across the eastern Sierra and western Nevada through today. Typical afternoon breezes will return today through the end of the week. After generally warm conditions through the end of the week, a slight cooling trend will settle in over the weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Cooler weather can be expected on the immediate coast today while inland spots will see another round of very warm to hot weather. Significantly cooler temperatures are anticipated in all areas on Tuesday with the return of onshore flow. Temperatures are then expected to remain near normal for the remainder of the week.

WEATHER

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry weather continues with daytime high temperatures trending cooler going into early part of the week. Near normal temperatures expected to persist through second half of the week.

Hanford Weather:

Very warm temperatures continue through today as high pressure persists. Tropical moisture will produce scattered rain showers and isolated thunderstorms over the Crest of the Sierra Nevada, Kern County Mountains and desert late Monday through Tuesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Hot temperatures will continue today before dropping closer to normal on Tuesday due to increasing cloud cover. An upper level low passing to the south will introduce the chance of showers and thunderstorms for parts of Los Angeles County later tonight into Tuesday. Above normal temperatures are expected for the remainder of the week.

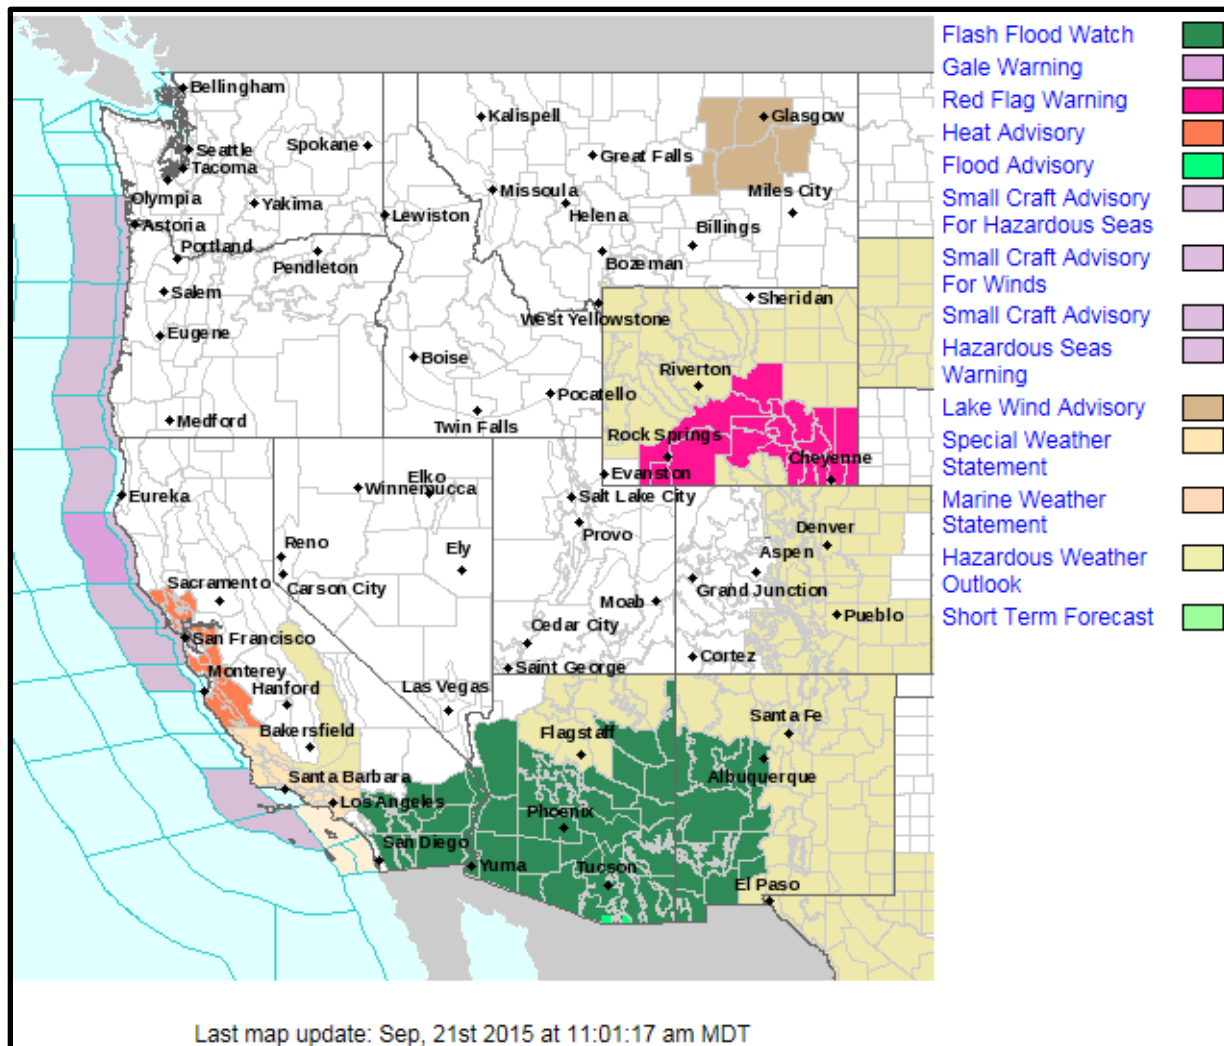

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Warm and humid today, with cooler conditions Tuesday. Upper-level disturbances and increased moisture will create the possibility of showers and thunderstorms at times today through Tuesday. Dry and warm for the remainder of the week as high pressure aloft builds over the southwest. Slightly cooler next weekend, with a possible return of night/morning low clouds along the coast.

Southeast California Weather:

Tropical moisture will interact with low pressure resulting in increasing cloud cover and chances for showers and thunderstorms later today through Tuesday. Locally heavy rainfall will be possible with stronger thunderstorms, especially south of interstate 40. Temperatures will remain above normal today except where thicker clouds develop with cooler temperatures expected area wide on Tuesday. Dry weather returns Wednesday onward with temperatures warming back above normal by Thursday.
